Bill Cosby

William Henry Cosby Jr. was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania on July 12, 1937. He once said, "The thing I remember most about being a kid was being poor." He remembers living in a house with no bathtub and one Christmas without a Christmas tree. When Bill Cosby was 9 years old, he started shining shoes to help out his family with money. In fifth grade, Cosby performed his first comedy routine for his teacher and classmates.

Cosby played on the track and football teams. After graduating from high school, Bill joined the United States Navy in 1956 and later attended the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. People of all ages enjoy his humor, and millions buy his record albums.

In 1977, Bill earned a doctoral degree in education. Since then he has appeared on the "Electric Company" and "Sesame Street" and has produced "Fat Albert" and the Cosby Kids. Bill uses his skill as an entertainer to teach children how to get along with others and ways of dealing with problems.

In 1986, "The Cosby Show" brought him more fame. In the show, Cosby played a doctor who is surrounded by his very funny family. This show tried to let everyone know that we all have the same kinds of problems.

Bill Cosby has been married since 1964. His wife's name is Camille and they had four daughters and one son.

American Culture

Rodeos

Rodeos are for men and women who like to ride horses or bulls. The goal is for the cowboy or cowgirl to stay on the horse or bull for as long as they can. Rodeos are most common in the western states of Colorado, Arizona, Wyoming, Texas and New Mexico. The person riding can get points during a rodeo and there is a winner at the end. There are different categories for the rider to compete in. When the rider gets bucked off the horse or bull, there are rodeo clowns that distract the bull so the rider can get away safely.
